The bar chart shows a survey about people's coffee and tea buying and drinking habits in five Australian cities over a four-week period.

In general, we can see that visiting a café for coffee or tea is marginally more popular than another two habits. However, a different trend can be seen if we look at the specific figures. In Sydney, Melbourne and Hobart, more than 60 percent of people bought the drink from a café. Whereas Adelaide had a different case, the number of people going to a cafe is only 1 percent less than that going to buy an instant coffee, and it is nearly 50 percent.

The other obvious character you will notice from the chart is that there was the fewest people accustomed to buying fresh coffee, significantly fewer than that of the other options, in Brisbane, Adelaide, and Hobart, where only fewer than 40 percent or even 35 percent of the city residents made this choice during the past 4 weeks. The situation was better in Sydney and Melbourne. At last, about instant coffee, the second choice of people, its popularity is more than that of fresh coffee and less than that of café coffee in five Australian cities.

This chart shows the process of making instant noodles. In general, the process is complicated and ordered, involving various apparatuses and the corresponding steps.

Production begins when flour is loaded from the storage silo onto the truck and then the truck unloads the flour. The first step is to pour the water and oil into the container used to make the dough. Then, the mixture passes through the rollers and becomes a thin piece of dough. The slices go through a cutting device and are cut into strips, which are then processed into noodle dishes. So far, half process has been completed.

Next step is to cook the disks in oil until they are dry and then put them into cups. Vegetables and spices are added as supplements and condiments. Finally, A conveyor belt takes the cup to the next station, where it is labeled and sealed. At this point, production is properly finished.

In some countries, people tend to buy a house, instead of renting one. As far as I am concerned, this lifestyle choice is entirely reasonable and there is an obviously reason, namely that buying a house is more worthwhile than renting a house. In other words, the former is investment while the latter is consumption and investment is the process of accumulating wealth while consumption is just the opposite.

For young people, leasing buildings has become a common life pattern, especially for those who work outside the home. The company does not provide accommodation, so they have to rent a house. There is a lot of flexibility in renting and you do not have to pay a lot of cash all at once.

However, there is a question worth pondering: in term of renting a house , although people do not need spend a large sum of money or draw on their parents' savings for the downpayment , and also do not need a commitment of time and energy to decorate their house, there is no capital appreciation of renting housing. Moreover, because people do not have the ownership of the house, if they have an uneasy relationship with their landlord or the rent levels near their position grow faster than their income, people need to move at any time. Then, they have to clean house, sort through drawers and clothing, and give away unwanted knickknacks as people are moving house. Meanwhile, some people will easily feel exhausted and distressed, and have a sense of drift because of no fixed abode. Just the opposite, if people buy a house at a good price and the house is in a good location, they can stay there at will. What's more, the money paid can be converted into a successful investment and people may one day sell the house at a higher price and earn extra income.

Hence, it is reasonable that some people prefer a title certificate to a lease, especially taking capital appreciation of the property into account.

With the advent of information technology, the traditional media are pushed to the corner and are struggling to survive. Being more convenient and faster, cell phones, personal computers, and devices that can be used to store e-books, such as kindle, are leading us to a paperless lifestyle. Meanwhile, some people think it is irresistible that printed newspapers or books will demise while e-books will prosper because people can read any newspaper or book online for free. However, I have to say this opinion sound rather absolute.

Frankly speaking, free content and services are attractive offers but printed newspapers or books truly does not cost too much. What's more, there are some advantages of printed ones that cannot be ignored. Traditional printed books have centuries-old history and they have created one kind of emotional connection and value for people. A book is more like a work of art and an avid reader tends to collect their favorite books that are published in hardback. Besides, in terms of reading, Electrical newspapers make it a much more difficult thing to have deep reading and thorough thinking for they advocate fast and superficial reading with enormous information, while printed ones encourage slow and deep reading with proper amounts of exact information. Last but not least, from a health standpoint, people more easily have sore eyes while reading e-books.

All in all, to some degree, printed newspapers or books are still irreplaceable. Nevertheless, there is no denying that newspapers or books online bring more convenience to people because wherever you are—having dinner in a restaurant, walking in a street, or waiting for your flight in an airport—just take out your cell phone and press several buttons, then the article you want to read will be presented to you immediately on the screen.

Today, we are affected by the advertisements everywhere. Some people think that successful advertisements can even manage to determine people's choice of purchase, but others think that people have immune to them. As far as I am concerned, advertisements are annoying and misleading, full of flowery phrases and empty promises so that people can hardly ignore their existence.

When we are walking on the street, we can see the ads everywhere, they are spread by the newspaper, the radio and so on. Advertising has become increasingly ubiquitous in our daily life. Much as we may pride ourselves on our good taste, we are no longer free to choose the things we want, for advertising exerts a subtle influence on us.

Advertisements have already become the most important means for consumers to know about a certain products. In order to attract more customers, advertisers will go to extremes. These extremes include showing products more favorably than they really are, using famous people to endorse their products, and making claims that are true about their products. Advertisers focus on selling a brand image. They use glamorous, successful people to represent their brands and encourage us to associate certain brands with a higher social status. Due to the star effect, we are persuaded to follow the latest trend. In some serious cases, advertisements are rendering the youth wallowing in the illusion of sheer pleasure brought by the goods but ignoring the harm these goods may cause.

All in all, we are all exposed to all kinds of advertisements every day and their effect on us cannot be denied.

ubiquitous 普遍的

pride oneself on sth/ on doing sth 引以为傲

advertisements are annoying and misleading, full of flowery phrases and empty promises so that people can hardly ignore their existence.

广告令人讨厌, 具有误导性, 充满华丽的短语和空洞的承诺, 使人们很难忽视他们的存在。

In some countries, elders often teach the younger generations with an old saying that where there is a will, there is a way and tell them success comes from diligence. From my point of view, diligence can help people achieve their goal but whether people can succeed is also affected by many other factors.

First of all, such ideology is surely do our lives more good than harm because except mere chance, most opportunities stem from our own attitude and mindset. Opportunities are always around us, waiting for those with courage and enterprise to seize them. What's more, many of our opportunities, are the result of hard work and perseverance. A perfect example is the Olympic athletes. Many Olympians are born with superior physiques, but without years of rigorous training, none of them would have realized their potential or have had the opportunity to participate in the Olympic Games.

However, the persuasive platitudes of hard work cannot be applied to every trade without considering people's talent and epiphany. A case in point: people who are biologically endowed with lower IQ are least likely to be a famous mathematician like Leonhard Euler, no matter how hard they try to study and practice. Likewise, a child suffering from congenital heart disease is fated not to run as Liu Xiang does. In this view, the encouragement and inspiration from parents or teachers are essentially a kind of poison that will make children feel frustrated and even despairing.

Judging from what we have discussed above, training and conditioning people to work hard to achieve their dreams is not a bad thing. Nevertheless, It is not advisable to promote the importance of efforts regardless of one's own conditions.
